THE ILLUSION OF FREEDOM FROM THE LAW

THE ILLUSION OF FREEDOM FROM THE LAW

Parenting is one of the greatest discipleship processes God put on the face of the earth. In fact, parenting can be defined as discipling children. The same model that is the foundation for the human parenting process is based upon the very one that God implemented to “parent” mankind. In understanding this model, we define what discipleship is and what it is to accomplish.

LOVE IS THE BASIS...

In the beginning...every parent desires to create the Garden of Eden in the form of a babies room. It takes on the form of a perfect haven. It is natural to sense our responsibility to provide and protect in this relationship. The baby is only capable of receiving, by depending upon the parent being in total control.

Such sacrificial and serving sort of love becomes the basis for the whole of the parenting proces. But, the way in which it relates and the role it takes will change as the infant grows from infancy through childhood and into adolescence.

Discipleship is Changing Your Focus.. HOW DOES CHANGE OCCUR?

THE ILLUSION OF FREEDOM FROM THE LAW

The same model that is the foundation for the human parenting process is based upon the very one that God implemented to “parent” mankind.

The same model that is the foundation for the human parenting process is based upon the very one that God implemented to “parent” mankind.

LAW IS INTERMEDIATE...

Everything seems perfect—until that one word passed the child’s lips... No! This begins a new stage in the parent-child relationship. A new role is taken on by the parent—the law giver. This is necessary to protect children from destroying themselves in their immature state. The parents become the authority; the child is accountable to them. Defining a performance standard coupled with positive and negative consequences becomes the means to control their behavior in a sin-tainted condition.

Look Out! This is where this role can be misconstrued by parents. The illusion is that the goal is to train them to become under this system. And, this illusion can be fortified as long as the children conform to such a method. But, God never intended this authority-accountability relationship to produce change. In fact, the law was designed to do just the opposite...the standard was to establish the reality that it cannot lived up to. The law was not meant to bring about righteous behavior, rather to establish the reality of sinful behavior (Rom. 3:19,20; 8:3-11; Gal. 2:16-21; 3:24, 25). It was not to be the solution, but only identify the problem. The law was designed to control behavior, and never designed to change behavior. And if we use it as such, we train children no differently than we train a dog.

Discipleship is Changing Your Focus.. HOW DOES CHANGE OCCUR?

THE ILLUSION OF FREEDOM FROM THE LAW

The same model that is the foundation for the human parenting process is based upon the very one that God implemented to “parent” mankind.

LIBERTY IS THE GOAL...

Just like Paul describes God fulfillment in our relationship, it was freedom that God has set us free (Gal. 5:1). The end goal is obvious, but the process of providing such liberty is not. How does one give such freedom to a budding adult? It is even more difficult when a parent knows no other system of training their children. If we have been disciplined by the law from our parents, it will be true, we can't pass on what we do not possess.

LIBERTY IS THE GOAL...

Just like Paul describes God fulfillment in our relationship, it was freedom that God has set us free (Gal. 5:1) The end goal is obvious, but the process of providing such liberty is not. How does one give such freedom to a budding adult? It is even more difficult when a parent knows no other system of training their children. If we have been disciplined by the law from our parents, it will be true, we can't pass on what we do not possess.

Thus, the goal in this transition time from law to liberty may be the value that comes to parents rather than the adolescent. How did God then transition mankind to this new found stage of liberty? How does He produce change apart from the law? How should we reflect this process in the discipling of our children to freedom? The secret is found in the discipleship process that He used to transition man from trying to become to following Him. Thus, the challenge becomes to be disciplined by this process so we can pass on what we do possess.

LIBERTY-NOT LAW

GOD'S PLAN...DISCIPLING TO FREEDOM

WHERE CAN YOU GO IN YOUR LIFE WHERE YOU DON'T LIVE UNDER A LAW-BASED RELATIONSHIP?

LOVE IS THE BASIS...

Recall how God had the same relationship with man in the Garden of Eden. He set up the ultimate baby's room for man. He spent time before man was created to set this perfect environment. When man was birthed, He lovingly placed him in this wonderfully prepared environment—the garden. God was in total control, wanting to protect and provide fully for all His creation's need.

LAW IS ONLY INTERMEDIATE...

Everything was perfect and at peace—until that one word passed the lips of mankind... No!

Even though His love was the same, the way He demonstrated it changed. We find God, as a parent of mankind, reacting the same way. He progressively set up the law for the good of mankind. Why? The scriptures specifies this was true for the same reasons—to protect us. God knew, like a parent, that mankind needed boundaries for our child-like, immature state (Gal. 2-5 and Rom. 5-9). It was a means to control the problem, until the right time came to reveal the solution to the problem (Gal. 3:19).

LAW IS ONLY INTERMEDIATE...

But, there was another reason for the law that we often overlook. God implemented it to not only protect mankind, but also to establish the reality that we can not live up to it. The law was not meant to bring about righteous behavior, but rather to establish the reality of sinful behavior (Rom. 3:19,20; 8:3-11; Gal. 2:16-21; 3:24, 25). The law was designed to control behavior, and never designed to change behavior. It was given to point out the problem, but never intended to provide the solution.

It becomes a standard to live by using consequences and accountability through a master-slave relationship. The result is a life lived in accordance to the flesh. God's standard was fulfilling its purpose. It was designed to surface the problem and control it until the solution would come. It was never intended to be the solution.

God's solution was found through implementing a new stage. But, how did God then transition mankind, in his adolescent state, to know how to relate with Him under this new found stage of liberty? He encapsulated a process in the three years He spent with a small group of twelve unassuming men. It was God's intent to orchestrate a discipleship process that would transition them from "trying to become" by living under the law. These men had been immersed in their religion of Pharisaism—trying to produce change through disciplined learning of God's principles and applying it through human effort.

Christ knew that it would take a long term process of deprogramming man from such performance-based acceptance to ingraining the Follow Me process for living under the freedom or liberty that was to come. Within this process, the essence of discipleship is birthed.
